that question; compare life to eternity; bear this in mind: that on your properation for death depends your sternity. What are the pictures or surrows of this life to the bliss or gloom of eternity? Simply nothing, not even room for a comparison. At death your account on the Great Book is closed, the balance sheet rendered; that balance, that everlasting and unchanging balsettled their bills and departed for their since, depends on your death. Yes, christian, across that sheet may by found the sentence; "Depart, ye cursed, be in your favor and across the sheet you may flud the promised benediction: "Well done, good and faithful child, enter unto my kingdom and take the place prepared for you." Death, like a third at night, creeps upon us when least we expect, and finds us unpremeet him at any moment, and when our angel guardian takes his flight to the realms above we may be able to follow him, and take the place that is ours through the precious blood shed on the tree which decided the fate of humanity, the tree upon which grew the apple
